Like many adolescents, fourteen-year-old Matt Bowen has no idea who he is. Anxious for connection and friendship, he embarks on a series of illegal break-ins, searching for acceptance in a world Matt says he never asked to be a part of. This offbeat debut novel, set in an English seaside bed and breakfast, is a poignant and funny coming-of-age story about identity—in all its guises—which charts Matt Bowen’s adventures as he learns hard truths about family and forgiveness.

“Matthew is a wonderful character: young but wise; long-suffering; a survivor. Bullock... sees life in its complexity, so that things that are funny are often tinged with sadness, while serious matters often have an element of slapstick about them. Making Faces is a clear-headed book about characters who don’t want to reveal themselves, or who want very much to reveal themselves, but wonder where and how to begin.” —Ann Beattie, author of Follies: New Stories
